Birmingham-based personal injury law firm Cory Watson Attorneys has expanded its footprint into Tennessee.

The firm has opened a second office in the Gulch neighborhood of Nashville at 1033 Demonbreun St., Suite 300.

Managing shareholder and cofounder Ernest Cory attributes the addition of the new office to growth of the firm, which is celebrating its 24th anniversary this month.

“Our firm has experienced tremendous growth in the last 24 years. We’ve compiled great resources and built a team of more than 25 accomplished attorneys and 96 talented staff members to help clients across the country in complicated mass torts, class actions, pharmaceutical, medical device, product liability and personal injury cases in Alabama and Tennessee,” Cory said. “As part of our celebration and growth strategy, this expansion into Nashville provides a great opportunity to bring more than 35 years of overall experience, a successful group of trial attorneys, our history of success and financial resources to our clients in Tennessee.”

The firm’s Tennessee team includes five attorneys: two firm principals, Elizabeth E. Chambers and D. Brett Turnbull, and three firm associates, J. Curt Tanner, Bobby LeMoine, and Hamilton Jordan. Cory Watson cofounders, Ernest Cory and Leila H. Watson, will oversee the Nashville office operations.

Chambers’ practice areas include personal injury, pharmaceutical litigation, defective medical device, products liability, mass torts litigation, motor vehicle accidents and toxic torts. She earned her degree from the Birmingham School of Law.

Turnbull’s practice areas include personal injury, wrongful death, product liability, nursing home negligence, insurance bad faith and traumatic brain injury. He earned his law degree from Samford University’s Cumberland School of Law.

The firm will continue assisting clients from the main office in downtown Birmingham.

“Our focus has always been on helping clients after a traumatic injury or accident,” said cofounder Leila H. Watson. “That focus will not change as we welcome new clients to our Cory Watson family through this expansion to Tennessee.”

Cory Watson is among Birmingham’s top 25 law firms in terms of size, according to our most recent law List.
